1Q23 Equity Commentary

We anticipated volatility in 2023, but the first quarter gave us more than we expected, and in different forms. We normally think of volatility in terms of stock price movements, but Q1 exhibited volatility in interest rates. The MOVE index, which measures bond market volatility, increased 48% by late March, reaching its highest level since the Lehman Brothers bankruptcy in the Great Financial Crisis. The yield on the 2-year US Treasury note hit a peak of 5.05% on March 8th, and then proceeded to drop 1.24% in just seven trading days and ended the guarter at 4.06%. This volatility was driven by early guarter optimism on inflation and consumer sentiment, only to be upended by mid quarter concerns that inflation was remaining stubbornly high. Comments by Fed Chair Powell during his Congressional testimony sent rates to their highs when he indicated he might have to raise rates in March by 50 basis points rather than 25. But this sentiment was reversed within days as news broke of two bank failures in California. The failures sparked fear of additional "bank runs" which resulted in a flight to quality (investors buying US Treasury securities), and increased odds of a recession as lending standards could tighten. Tighter lending standards often lead to job losses, so it wasn't a surprise that the instability in the banking system led to interest rate declines. As it stands today, the fixed income markets and the Fed are in stark disagreement as to the path of future interest rates. The Fed believes they may have to increase rates further (1 additional hike), and if inflation persists or the economy remains resilient, they most definitely will. But the bond markets are taking a different track, with the Fed Funds futures pricing in 2 rate cuts by year end. These are diametrically opposed views, and someone will be wrong. While the Fed is laser focused on inflation, the bond market is seeing recessionary indicators that will need easing monetary policy, not tighter. And through all this banking and rate upheaval since March 8th, the equity market has remained solid, with the S&P 500 increasing 2.9%.

The Economy – Financial Stability, Inflation, and Jobs: We all know that the Fed has a dual mandate of maintaining price stability and maximum employment. However, when an event occurs that could undermine the stability of the overall financial system, that trumps the other two. In the recent banking turmoil, the Fed acted quickly and appropriately by establishing a lending facility that allowed banks to borrow against their bond holdings, at par, to provide the banking system with additional liquidity, without having to resort to selling bonds. And as we wrote in an earlier piece, this was important as the banking system relies on consumer's confidence that deposits are safe. We believe that with the actions taken the Fed, FDIC, and the Treasury passed that test. But even with the financial system stable, we still expect the US economy to officially enter recession later this year. The 500 basis points of rate increases instrumented by the Fed over the past year are starting to have their impacts. Interest sensitive sectors such as real estate have slowed, and housing prices are starting to show some declines on the West Coast. Tighter lending standards (especially from smaller/midsize banks) will also serve as faux rate hikes given that companies will have a harder time accessing capital. Small and medium business are vital to the overall economy as they account for 40% of GDP and 50% of jobs, yet small business optimism is already below Covid lows. Inflation should continue to decline over the balance of the year, and while the jobs market has remained strong, the unemployment rate recently increased to 3.6%, which is now above the 12-month moving average which has been a reliable indicator that recession is close. The CPI index, ex food and energy, is at 5.5% y/y, and the Fed's preferred metric the Core PCE is at 4.6%. The trend is in the right direction, but the pace of decline is slower than the Fed had anticipated. The M2 money supply fell by $130 billion in February and is down 2.4% year over year. This will drag inflation down but will also slow nominal GDP, jobs, and corporate profits. First quarter GDP should be positive with consensus expecting growth just under 1%, and the full year should look similar, with a small rebound in 2024. Don't be surprised if first quarter GDP is higher (Atlanta Fed Now predicts GDP of 1.7%), as consumer spending remains solid with retail sales up 5.4% y/y in February, and up 6.4% y/y for the 3-month period of December through February. But Q1 should be the high point for the year. With credit tightening, higher rates on credit cards, dwindling excess savings, and the possible end of the student loan moratorium by summer, consumers will be under pressure. Weakness is already evident in the manufacturing sector as the Manufacturing ISM Index has contracted for 3 months and is at its lowest level since May of 2020. The services side of the economy looks better, with the February Services ISM expanding for the second month in a row, and still showing labor tightness and pricing pressures.

First Quarter Market Recap: The market shrugged off the financial turmoil in Q1 and posted a gain of 7.4%. While the headline number is impressive, the gains were not as widespread as it might appear. Year to date 90% of the market's rally is attributable to just 10 stocks (mostly tech). The equal weighted S&P 500 (each stock given an equal weighting) was up just 2.9%. Simply said, what worked in Q1 2023 was what didn't work in 2022. Growth beat Value and Dividend Payers, Large Capitalization beat Small Capitalization, and the spread of the NASDAQ return (+16.9%) over the Dow Jones Industrial Average return (0.77%) at over 16% is the biggest since 2001. The technical breadth of the market also weakened in the quarter with just 60% of stocks above their 200-day moving average by quarter end versus almost 79% above in early February. Technology led the way gaining almost 22%, followed closely by Communications Services adding 20.5%. These sectors and their "growthier" companies benefit from lower rates, and as interest rates declined in the quarter these sectors advanced. The largest technology companies are viewed now as safe havens due to their strong balance sheets, and their ability to grow earnings even in an anticipated slowing economy. Consumer Discretionary gained 16.1% which would seem odd if we are on the cusp of recession, yet this again was an example of a group that did not perform well in 2022 (-36%), and perhaps the market is pricing in a mild recession. Not surprisingly, Financials were the biggest loser in Q1 at -5.6%, but the Regional Bank and KBW Nasdag Bank Index both fell 24.7% and 17.9% respectively. Larger money center banks fared better than the regionals, since the impression is that the government views them as "too big to fail", even if there is no explicit deposit guarantee. The deposit issues in the banking system appear to be idiosyncratic and not systemic, so we would expect some rebound in the banking stocks as the situation moderates. Energy was also a laggard as the sector declined 4.7% with West Texas Intermediate crude oil prices dropping 5.7%. Defensives didn't fare well in Q1 with Healthcare off 4.3% and Utilities down 3.2%. With the rise in short term interest rates Utilities yields are now less than what investors can earn in money market funds or Treasury bills.

What to Expect Going Forward: It's hard to say that the outlook is great with an economy that will likely weaken, declining earnings, inflation that may prove to be sticky, and a market multiple at 17.8X that is just above the 10-year average. But we always operate in an environment of unknowns, and we never know how much of those unknowns are priced into the market. Remember that this recession (that is yet to happen) is probably the most anticipated in our careers, and the market decline in 2022 probably was pricing in some level of recession. So, while uncertainty will always exist, we do believe that the Fed is near the end of this tightening cycle, and the economy is late cycle and closer to recession. We don't know yet if the Fed is at the "pause" point, or if they will raise rates again. The inflation data will dictate those decisions.

The Fed is intent on squelching inflation but runs the risk of damaging the economy at the same time. It's also possible that the Fed could stay on "pause" for an extended time. As we mentioned earlier, the Fed Funds futures do not expect that. With all of that in mind, history tells us that the market tends to go down after the first Fed rate cut, which is really a signal that the economy needs some help. It takes roughly 6 months for the market to reach its low after that first rate cut. We are about to have our second consecutive guarter of declining year over year earnings with Q1 eps expected to be -6.6% (biggest decline since Q2, 2020). Earnings estimates are coming down, and 2023 consensus is now for earnings growth of just 1.5% (at 12/31 this estimate was +4.5%). We continue to believe that estimates will move lower, and 2023 earnings growth will be negative. Operating margins usually decline by 1.5% during recessions, and as companies strive to maintain profits as much as possible, jobs are cut. The labor market is still tight with 311,000 jobs added last month, but job losses should increase later this year, causing consumers to instinctively become less optimistic, leading to lower spending. We saw slightly lower spending in February than January, and the Personal Savings Rate increased in February to 4.6% from 4.4% in January. It's estimated that consumers still have $1.1 trillion of excess savings, so this should help most to weather a mild recession. Equity strategy in this kind of market is tricky to say the least. During the "pause" period, a mix of both cyclical and defensive sectors have outperformed. After the first Fed cut the market more clearly tends to favor defensive market groups such as beverages, personal products, pharmaceuticals, food and healthcare providers. The more economically sensitive cyclical sectors tend to do worse. But timing is tricky knowing that the Fed could remain on pause, and the challenge is not to become too defensive too soon. Our portfolios have a bias to quality, and we have defensive exposure, so we would anticipate reducing some cyclical exposure and adding more defense when the timing is appropriate. With Treasury bills and money market funds yielding in the mid 4% range, bonds now offer attractive yields that allow investors to earn moderate income which is a dramatic change from the 12 years of easy monetary policy that led us to near zero interest rates. So, for now, we will continue to closely monitor inflation data, looking for insights as to where this will lead the markets.

1Q23 Large Cap Growth Equity Commentary

The first quarter of 2023 was marked by strong performance in growth stocks. Despite continued market volatility, bank failures, and ongoing recession signals from the bond market, The Russell 1000 Growth Index gained an impressive 14.36% during the quarter. Performance was driven in part by a rebound of 2022's most beaten-down names and a resurgence of mega-cap stocks. It's worth noting that the top five largest index weights contributed over 63.8% of the first quarter total return. Mega-cap performance this quarter appeared to be driven by two themes: enthusiasm around AI advancements and a flight to quality. This illustrates some of the mixed messages we continue to see in the market. While index returns were undoubtably strong, the distribution was concentrated, with 68.9% of securities trailing the total index return. We continue to believe our quantitative approach combined with disciplined risk management will identify opportunities in this dynamic environment.

Factor Trends

In our opening, we discussed the resurgence of 2022's worst performers. The chart below illustrates this dynamic, evidenced by the inverse relationship between high momentum and high volatility stocks. Notably, the highest volatility stocks outperformed dramatically during the quarter, leading to what some have descripted as the "January effect on steroids." We don't expect this trend to be durable; historically high volatility underperforms over the long run. The growth factor rebounded in the quarter, which bodes well for our investment process. However, it is important to note the factor significantly underperformed in 2022, with returns of -34.7%. Finally, we observed significant outperformance in the size factor (largest companies outperforming) during the last month of Q1.

Highland Large Cap Growth

The Large Cap Growth strategy slightly trailed the Russell 1000 Growth Index for the first quarter. We capitalized on more tactical opportunities within our process, and our tracking error varied throughout Q1. Strategy adjustments were primarily influenced by momentum factor exposure, where the model drove us to become less active in early January and reverted to more normal levels of exposure towards the end of the month. Overall, these tactical changes contributed positively to our performance. We ended the quarter back at the low end of our tracking error range. From a sector standpoint, the strategy underperformed in Consumer Discretionary and Information Technology, mostly due to weak security selection. Cash drag was the most significant headwind to performance during the quarter on the Index's strong rebound. Our process generated positive attribution driven by both security selection and sector allocation in Consumer Staples, Healthcare, Communication Services, Materials, and Financials.

Outlook

We continue to see significant opportunity in the growth index. While there is a high level of uncertainty around recession risk; many headwinds from 2022 are starting to ease. We anticipate The Federal Reserve seems will soon slow or pause the pace of rate hikes and interest rates have likely reached a near term peak. We expect that valuation multiple compression will be significantly less of a headwind, allowing fundamentals to return to focus. Despite the possibility of fundamental weakness, current expectations are pessimistic, leaving ample room for companies to exceed expectations. Multiple sectors and industries within the growth index are still in early innings of long term secular growth. We remain convicted that our quantitative process will systematically put us in the best position to capture these opportunities.

1Q23 Fixed Income Portfolio Manager Commentary

At the conclusion of its latest meeting, the Federal Reserve decided to raise the funds rate by 25 basis points, which brings the target range to 4.75-5%. While this move was expected, the Fed projected a more cautious path for the funds rate than Chair Powell had indicated before the recent banking turmoil. The Fed projected a weak economic outlook for the rest of 2023, and Chair Powell noted that tighter credit conditions might substitute for one or more rate hikes, but could reevaluate as it learned more about the impact of recent events in the banking sector.

The Fed signaled that it may be nearing the end of its aggressive series of rate hikes. The statement now says "some additional policy firming may be appropriate"—indicating a weaker commitment to future hikes. Even though the Fed signaled that the end of rate hikes is likely near, there are no assurances that this is a firm commitment. If CPI stays near 6% between now and May's Fed meeting and the bank crisis is contained, the Fed may signal more rate hikes ahead. The regional banking crisis will likely put downward pressure on bank lending standards (and the economy/inflation), but this situation hasn't made the task of navigating a soft recession landing any easier.

Chair Powell generally adhered to the idea of separating financial stability from monetary policy tools, albeit with limitations. Although the markets have been rattled by the recent banking industry turmoil, it's worth recalling that the economy has retained its momentum despite nine successive rate hikes. Retail sales remain strong, as does the service industry in general. The housing market is acting as though there "might" be a turnaround, given the renewed increase in building permits and overall housing sales. Jobless claims remain low, and the unemployment rate has defied Fed Fund rates moving back towards the 5% target range. Inflation rates remain rather stubborn, with food costs up an annualized 9.5%. Core inflation, excluding food and energy, dropped a bit last month to 5.5%. Meanwhile, the central bank's target benchmark rate (the Core PCE) has now reached its highest level in 16 years. The new level will likely lead to higher costs for loans, mortgages, auto purchases, credit cards and corporate borrowing.

In the Fed's March statement, it contained a reassurance about the U.S. banking system, stating that it is both "sound and resilient." The Fed amended the phrase "ongoing increases to the target range may be appropriate" to "some additional policy firming may be appropriate," which was a nod to potential tighter financial conditions for households and businesses as a result of the events of the last 2 weeks. The Fed believes that tighter financial conditions will have an effect similar to a rate hike, but they won't know the extent of that effect for some time. Thus, the new phrase provides some flexibility in terms of the number of additional hikes that are necessary.

The volatility in the bond market was historically elevated in the quarter. The MOVE Index, which measures Treasury volatility, reached the second highest level all time. The 2 year Treasury traded in a range of 3.76% to 5.05% during the quarter. After a difficult 2022, all major fixed income indices generated positive returns during the quarter. Municipal bonds have historically exhibited lower levels of volatility compared to the Treasury market, which was evident during the first quarter of this year. Moreover, the municipal bond market has benefited from the current lack of new issuance. In 2023, municipalities have sold about $69 billion in long-term debt, which is down twenty-three percent from the same period last year. This decline in new issuance has led to increased demand for existing municipal bonds, which has in turn helped to support bond prices.

As the Fed nears the end of its tightening cycle, the market is still trying to digest the rapid increase in short term interest rates. Liquidity was exceptionally strong towards the beginning of 2023, however when the banking crisis developed risk assets in the bond market experienced a rapid deterioration in liquidity. Silicon Valley and Signature Bank reinforced our belief in the need for diversification even in bond portfolios. No company is immune from exogenous events which have now shown to develop in a short period of time. We remain cautiously optimistic on the return potential for bonds going forward as investors are starting to take notice of the yield opportunities prevalent in the investment grade market.
